

CONGRESSIONAL ACTION

While federal regulators are investigating the causes of the incident to make sure this does not happen again, Congress is also investigating the causes of the explosion, including the adequacy of the companies' safety and emergency response measures, and conducting oversight of the recovery efforts.

With estimates that the oil spill may be the costliest in American history, House Democrats have introduced legislation to protect taxpayers from paying the cost and ensure that oil companies are held accountable.

The

Big Oil Bailout Prevention Act

would:

- Raise the liability cap for offshore oil well spills from $75 million to $10 billion.

- Eliminate the $1 billion per incident cap on claims against the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund and allow community responders to access the fund for preparation and mitigation up front, rather than waiting for reimbursement later.
- Allow claimants to collect from future revenues of the fund, with interest, if damages claims exceed the amount in the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund (currently $1.6 billion).
- Eliminate the $500 million cap on natural resources damages.
